The North Carolina Board alleged that Dr. De Young misdiagnosed two patients with breast cancer from tissue obtained from biopsies, failed to timely assess tissue samples obtained during surgery for possible cancer, and asked a resident physician to lie for him to account for the delay. The North Carolina Board suspended Dr. De Young's medical license for one year, all but thirty days were stayed, and ordered him to complete a Board-approved professional ethics program prior to reapplying to reinstate his North Carolina medical license.
